Political Culture and Leadership in India

By Bharati Mukherjee

Mittal Publications, New Delhi, 1991. N.A. Book Condition: New. X+403pp In a New Society, the ethos and idioms of the micro- and macro-politics are remarkably different from those of the developed societies as politics of modernization changes the underlying political culture through slow but steady politicization of individuals and aggregations. New dimensions of the style of political leadership are also revealing. The present work is the first scientific study, based on sophisticated statistical methods, of political leadership pattern in West Bengal ? a sub-system within the new federal society of India that illustrates ?multiple-polarization? of Indian politics. It is a detailed empirical study of a select group of political leaders of four major political parties dominant in West Bengal Political parties dominant in West Bengal politics during late 70s and early 80s based on the analysis of leadership ? composition in terms of the back group variables and attitude-complexes to the leader-respondents. The study is essentially a micro-level research, But since all the four parties understudy are operationally important at the national ? level. the emerging pattern of leadership as exposed in West Bengal may be projected at the macro level also. Further researchers as well as all those interested in...
