In discussing the needs of the bee-keeping industry these may perhaps be best divided under three headings--scientific, economic, and educational. In naming them it does not follow that all are absolute necessities before the industry can reach its highest perfection, but there are many lines which should be taken up which, while not necessary, are very desirable in order that the men engaged in the industry may be well informed concerning the various phases of the science. SCIENTIFIC NEEDS. Statistical.--In order that honey and wax may come to hold a stable place in the market there should be available more detailed statistics as to the scope of the industry and, following that, properly timed crop reports, so that the products may sell for what they are worth. Zoological.--In spite of all that has been written on races of bees, the subject is far from being completely exhausted. More reliable work should also be done on the anatomy and embryology of the bee. Numerous papers and books have been written on these subjects, especially on anatomy, but they generally prove incorrect and unscientific when carefully studied. It is regrettable that too often pseudoscientists have been allowed to impose on the bee-keeping public by sending out publications purporting to be the results of research which are in reality compilations in large part, and the actual observations of the author are not based on a proper preparation for such work. The amount of work done on the physiology...
