There are four investigations which will be using LMM in the FIR: Physics of Colloids in Space2 (PCS2) PCS2 will study the nucleation, growth, morphology and coarsening of crystal structures as well as rheological properties. Three general classes of samples are planned: binary hard sphere alloys (highly ordered), colloid polymer mixtures, and fractal aggregates. Physics of Hard Spheres Experiment2 (PHaSE2) PHaSE2 will study nucleation, growth, rheological properties and morphology of crystal structures in the context of hard sphere colloidal suspensions. The intent is to create novel structures, to study the dynamics of their formation, and their phase transitions in order to differentiate kinetic and equilibrium structures. Colloidal Assembly in Entropically Driven LowVolumeFraction Binary Particle Suspensions This experiment will study the nucleation and growth of surface crystal structures from colloidal suspensions. The study will focus on lowvolume fraction particle suspensions of unagglomerated spheres having small diameters so that thermodynamically driven Brownian motion maintains the suspension. These entropically driven crystallization experiments will explore the creation of new colloidal structures of potential industrial importance (e. g. , photonic bandgap crystals). By eliminating particle sedimentation effects, microgravity creates a purely thermodynamic environment for the suspensions where particle size, volume fraction and interparticle interactions are the . . .
