Excerpt: .remarkable ability as a speaker. called upon to train a successor to Dr. Washington, it is hard to see how any improvement could have been made upon the methods employed in that training. Major Moton is accustomed to say in his Northern speeches that he is especially thankful to Hampton for three things: It has helped his people to an appreciation of the dignity of the labor of the hands. It has helped whites and blacks to work together in harmony and mutual usefulness by offering a platform where they can come together for discussion of their difficulties. It has helped to create in the Negro respect for his own race. In aiding the school to accomplish these ends Major Moton himself has done much, and his success at Hampton gives reason to believe that he will be able to carry successfully the heavy load still to be placed upon his shoulders. Consideration of the experiences while at Hampton of these, its two most distinguished graduates, suggests one or two thoughts. Neither of them could have passed Hampton's present curriculum when they first arrived at the school. In the event to extend Hampton's curriculum and meet the needs of Hampton had been. Luzon: for Hampton Washington! increasing need of leaders for the Negro race, it is important that the school keep its feet on the ground, and not turn away from its doors boys from country districts who show marked...
