Not illustrated. 1912 Excerpt: .phrase, clause, or a sentence, but it has got to be a unit of thought. And there is no opportunity for that long delay of analyzing and thinking back over the elementary drill. Now, the hearing child acquires the ability to interpret the sequence of sound that we call utterance long before he is able himself to produce those sequences of sound, and longer still before he is able to produce those arbitrary symbols which we have associated with the utterance of sound, in other words, writing or printing. The deaf child should follow the same sequence as the hearing child. He should be trained to interpret ideas from sequences of movement before he is able to produce those movements, and long before he is able to produce the arbitrary symbols which we call writing or printing. That this is possible, every one of you here knows; you see it every day. little children come to you three, four, five, six--whatever time they come to you, provided they have had no early instruction--and in a short time of two hours, and perhaps a few minutes, they can be taught to recognize some ideas from the sequence of movements we call utterance. It may be their own name, it may be the name of some object, toy, something that will interest them. And very quickly you can build up a comprehension of spoken language in a little child, the child having no knowledge that there is such...
